PREFACE

I have great pleasure in placing before the public in general and scholars in particular the fifteenth volume in the series being brought out under the scheme, "National Register of Private Records". The present documentation is only a part of material received from the State Cell, National Register of Private Records which was located at Bhubaneswar, and which surveyed and listed material in the custody of individuals and institutions in Orissa during 1982-85. The rest of the material sent by the aforesaid Cell would be included in the subsequent volume(s), which would be published by the National Archives of India.

As in the previous volumes, the material included in the present volume are grouped under the institution(s) as well as individual collections they pertain to, and the descriptive list of the documents has been chronologically arranged under each collection. Information about the availability of research facilities and salient features of documents has been given in an introductory note to each collection. While compiling the volume, the original dates as given in the documents whether in Amli/Hijri/ Vikram Samvat have been retained and the dates given in the brackets denote the corresponding Christian era. The original papers not being in our custody, it is hoped that our limitations in either verifying/supplementing the information would be well appreciated. Under the circumstances, we have tried to adhere closely to the original, identifying the personal and place names to the extent possible. A glossary and nominal index has also been added to the volume. With all this little or more done, it is hoped that the scholars would find the work useful and helpful to them.

Majority of the documents included in the volume relate to internal administration of Lord Jagannath Temple, viz. regulation of rites and rituals of daily worship of the deities in the temple and the measures taken by the Raja of Puri for ensuring the security of the pilgrims visting the temple on festive occasions. Besides, a close study of these documents reveals the pattern of financial and land revenue administration of Orissa. It may be noted here that the main source of the income of the temple was pilgrim tax. Pilgrim tax was collected at the time of entering the Puri town and its evasion was considered a serious offence. Cases of misappropriation of pilgrim tax were also recorded, and suitable legal action were taken against guilty persons.

From a perusal of the documents listed herein, it is known that the Raja of Puri used to grant pattas to ryots on fixed annual revenue. Actual collection of land revenue was done by the sarbarakars, who were appointed in consultation with British Indian Government. However, the British Indian Government did not generally interfere with the temple administration of Puri, though there are some documents in this volume which bear evidence to the fact that they some times meddled with the temple administration. There are also some interesting documents on the relations between the British and the Raja of Puri. In 1857 the Raja of Puri was asked to surrender his cannon alongwith the arms and ammunition under his possession, possibly as a security measure against the Indian disaffection. This documentation also contains information about British relations with the feudatory states of Orissa. I am sure that the information included in this volume would promote further research in the history of Orissa.

I am thankful to all those individuals/institutions who have helped the State Cell, National Register of Private Records, Bhubaneswar in surveying and listing of records in their custody and also allowed us to include the same in this volume. I am also thankful to my staff colleagues who have worked so devotedly and painstakingly in bringing out this volume.
